ON THE COVER

Robert W. Arnholt, '80, recipient of the 2012 Maurice O. Graff Distinguished Alumnus Award, spent time when returning to campus to work with graduate students Olivia Hudson, left, and John Scheil, right. They played beeper baseball, goal ball and wheelchair basketball – games they use to keep people with disabilities active. Arnholt is recognized internationally for his work in adapted physical education. Hudson and Scheil are in UW-L's graduate adapted physical education program.

A HOME AWAY FROM HOME

It took time to adjust to college. My new home had more than twice as many people as my high school class.

Living in a residence hall changed my life. I learned to live with people from different religions and cultures. As a hall leader, I discovered how to build consensus when working with disputes and on community projects. And I made friendships that lasted decades.

Much of residence hall life didn't just happen — it was carefully tweaked by hall directors and staff. They guided my newly found freedom. Today's staff continues that tradition.

It's reassuring that despite all of today's changing technologies, personal relationships still play a key role in college life.

Proud to be a UW-L alum,

BOOKS, E-READERS, COFFEE & MORE

Libraries have changed significantly since I started as an academic librarian in the '70s — first at Oklahoma State, then Michigan State before coming to UW-L in 1987.

Libraries were much less “self service.” It wasn't simple to retrieve information via computer. Librarians used command language to search online services that charged by the minute!

In 1988 when the library purchased its first CD-ROM education database, ERIC, the campus community could search at a single computer without a librarian. Today, users access library-provided e-content worldwide.

With more e-information, book purchasing has declined. However, e-resources have not supplanted many older formats. Physical books are still a wonderful resource — they're portable and some books are available only in print. The microfilm collection is shrinking. We still buy DVDs, but also subscribe to an online film service.

One significant cultural shift has been physical spaces. In 2006 Murphy Library's first floor was remodeled for collaborative student work in a wireless environment. Students can check out laptops and iPads, and plug into large, mobile monitors.

The library has become much more “student-friendly” and attracts those who like traditionally quiet spaces and others who prefer group interaction. In 2007 a café, Murphy's Mug, opened for those wanting a research break. Foot traffic increased substantially after these changes.

It's been exciting to see library staff rethink spaces and adapt to new technologies. This year Murphy will launch a new service with other UW schools to make it easier to search across e-resources.

Libraries just keep getting better at connecting users to scholarly information. Stop by!

Kiplinger's 'Best Value'

UW-L remains on Kiplinger's Personal Finance's list of 100 best values in public colleges nationwide. The February 2012 issue ranked UW-L No. 62 for in-state and No. 52 for out-of-state students. Rankings cite the top 100 four-year schools that "combine outstanding education with economic value." UW-L is still the top ranked UW comprehensive university in the state. Get complete rankings at: www.kiplinger.com/reports/best-college-values.

UW-L app options grow

Android cell phone users can now find a mobile app for UW-L. The app joined the Apple version introduced earlier in the year. The app includes the campus directory, events listings, maps, news, photos, videos and library info. Get the Android app from Google Play. Visit iTunes for the iPhone app.

New provost hired

A Minnesota native who lived in England for more than two decades has returned to the Midwest to become provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Heidi Slettedahl Macpherson, previously pro vice chancellor of Research and Innovation at De Montfort University in Leicester, England, began her UW-L post July 1, 2012.

Macpherson expects her 22-year experience overseas to help her transition into the role at UW-L.

"I have been impressed by the care and attention offered to the student experience at UW-L, by the real sense of community shown by students, faculty and staff, and by the welcome I have already received," she says.

Macpherson follows Kathleen Enz Finken, who resigned in December to become provost at Cal Poly University in San Luis Obispo, Calif.

New leadership

Bruce Riley,
Dean of the College of Science and Health

Riley came to campus in 1985 as assistant professor in mathematics. He was promoted to professor in 1993. He chaired the Mathematics Department from 1996-2009 before being appointed interim dean in 2009. He became permanent dean in early February.

Bruce May, Dean of the College of Business Administration

May has been CBA associate dean for eight years, including two years as interim CBA Dean. May has been appointed CBA dean from July 2012 through the 2014-15 academic year, when a national search for a dean will occur. He replaces Bill Colclough who will return to teach in the Finance Department.

Marcie Wycoff-Horn, Director of the School of Education

Wycoff-Horn came to campus in 2002 as assistant professor in the Department of Health Education and Health Promotion.

She was promoted to professor in 2010. Wycoff-Horn, who has served as interim director of the School of Education for the past two years, was named permanent director of the school in March following a national search.

THE TIME WAS JUST RIGHT

JIM AND JAN
GALLAGHER MADE A DONATION TO THE
UW-L FOUNDATION
TO START A SCHOLARSHIP FOR

Jim and Jan Gallagher say education transformed their lives. Exposure to new ideas and perspectives sparked curiosity. It led to extensive studies, multiple diplomas and, eventually, careers doing what they loved.

Jan, who earned her master's in Business Administration from UW-L in 1988, was director of UW-L's Small Business Development Center from 1993 to 2010. Jim, who taught archaeology at UW-L from 1977-2002, helped start the university's archaeology major — one of a handful of undergraduate archaeology degree programs in the U.S. He also helped found the Mississippi Valley Archaeology Center on campus.

Not only has education transformed Jim's life, but, as a professor, he watched it transform the lives of students.

"I've seen freshmen students who practically didn't know which end of the shovel to pick up," jokes Jim. "But, by the time some of them were seniors, they were delivering professional papers at national conferences."

Recently the couple made a $25,000 commitment to the UW-L Foundation to start a scholarship for archaeology students. They hope the gift inspires others to give. At age 70 1/2 people are required to take a minimum distribution from their IRA accounts. Jim and Jan plan to use a portion of their distribution to complete the gift commitment.

"Tuition has gone up and it's getting harder and harder for students to afford a university education," notes Jim. "We wanted to help make it easier."

The couple's commitment to education and students has been there all along. "The timing is just right for us now," says Jan.

Blood relation?

Research could lead to answers about human heart conditions, bleeding disorders

Ground squirrels can do something really cool humans can't. They can burrow into the ground and hibernate, slowing their heart rate to four beats per minute.

If a human's heart slowed down that much, blood in the body would clot.

The big question is: 'How does a squirrel do that?'

It's a question UW-L Biology Professor Scott Cooper and his student researchers are trying to figure out. Their research project recently received a $303,700 grant from the National Institute of Health.

"If we can figure out how squirrels prevent their blood from clotting, we can possibly figure out how to do it in humans," says Cooper as he looks at pictures of a squirrel heart in his lab. "It's a puzzle. As a scientist, that's what keeps you going."

Solving this puzzle isn't just for fun. It could contribute to saving lives. About 40 percent of all deaths in America are due to a blood clot in the heart, notes Cooper. Preventing clotting could also lead to treating bleeding disorders and heart disease.

Cooper started the research about five years ago by studying the extensive and complex process of how squirrel blood forms a clot.

"Science can be described as putting a puzzle together," explains Cooper. "But sometimes, even before you can do that, you have to find the pieces."

Leah Morgan, UW-L graduate student in cell and molecular biology, feels a personal connection to the research since her father recently had a heart attack.

"It's good to know you're doing research on a project that has a purpose and direction," she says.

An advocate for people with disabilities

ROBERT W. ARNHOLD

Robert Arnhold has impacted persons with disabilities nationwide.

The Slippery Rock University professor who earned a master's in adapted physical education from UW-L in 1980 has done much more than research and teach about those with disabilities. He's advocated for them for decades.

Arnhold was called to help revive programs for Camp Shriver, a Special Olympics initiative founded by Eunice Kennedy Shriver that focuses on developing sport skills and friendship building.

His students assisted Special Olympics coaches with volunteer training.

Arnhold was also key in helping Slippery Rock University establish the Storm Harbor Equestrian Center. The one-of-a-kind facility caters to those with mental and physical disabilities by using horses in their therapy.

His expertise has landed Arnhold national leadership roles in advocating for persons with disabilities. He often heads to Washington, D.C., to advocate for getting people involved in physical activities.

"Robert is one of only a handful of experts in the U.S. who specializes in the areas of legislative issues for health and wellness among persons with disabilities, and horseback riding as a therapy for persons with disabilities," notes UW-L Professor Garth Tymeson.

An inclusive leader

Thomas Harris has done much to advance diversity on campus — and in the La Crosse community.

Harris came to campus as a hall director in 1990. After three years, he moved into the Residence Life Office to advise the Residence Hall Association Council and National Residence Hall Honorary, provide leadership development, and serve as a liaison with Multicultural Student Services.

Retired Assistant Director of Residence Life Ruth Kurinsky says Harris quickly became highly respected by students, colleagues, administrators and those in the community. “People actively sought opportunities to work with and learn from [him],” notes Kurinsky.

Former La Crosse Mayor John Medinger, ’70 & ’72, calls Harris a friend, as well as a key contributor to the betterment of the community. “He has influenced and made life better for countless individuals over a long period of time,” notes Medinger. “He continues to do that today.”

THOMAS HARRIS

Thomas Harris file

- Distinguished professional in the field of student affairs.
- Leader of efforts to pursue racial equality and social justice.
- Honored by the Wisconsin United Resident Hall Association, a student-run leadership organization, when it renamed its top adviser award the “Thomas Harris Advisor of the Year.”
- Founder and president of the 7 Rivers Region Diversity Collaboration Initiative Inc.
- Assistant Director of the UW-L Multicultural Student Services Office since 2003; worked in the UW-L Residence Life Office from 1990-2001.
- Graduated with a bachelor’s degree from UW-Stevens Point, 1988; earned a master’s in college student personnel from UW-L, 2001.

The Rada Distinguished Alumni Award ...

recognizes alumni who have graduated within the past 20 years and have achieved distinction in their field, made an outstanding contribution, demonstrated exceptional ethical qualities and participated in humanitarian activities.

Gregory Banks file

- Worked with the Social Security Administration in La Crosse, Eau Claire and Madison.
- Served as a policy research analyst at the UW-Madison Center for Health Systems Research and Analyses.
- Served as administrator for the Madison Metropolitan School District.
- Member of Madison Mayor's Commission on People with Disabilities; Madison's Affirmative Action Commission.
- Diagnosed with Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis in 1996. Died Sept. 30, 2011.
- Graduated with a bachelor's in political science and public administration from UW-L in 1981; attended The Robert M. La Follette Institute of Public Affairs in Madison.

Parker Multicultural Alumni Award ...

recognizes outstanding multicultural alumni who have graduated and have significantly contributed to or advanced multicultural understanding.

A pioneer for diversity

GREGORY BANKS

It was the mid-70s when Gregory Banks came to campus. He was among the first students recruited into a newly designed pre-collegiate program aimed at making UW-L's student population more diverse.

Banks excelled in that role, recalls Professor Emeritus of English Robert Treu: "Gregory performed ably both as a student and as an advocate for a number of multicultural issues."

Professor Emeritus of History William Pemberton remembers Banks as a leader among his peers and in the classroom. "He had an unusual ability to take remote historical forces, understand how they applied to his life, and then use his excellent verbal ability to show his classmates how such abstractions shaped their lives."

Banks worked with the Social Security Administration in La Crosse, Eau Claire and Madison, and eventually became a Madison Metropolitan School District administrator.

Banks was forced to retire early when he was diagnosed with ALS. But, his impact remains. "Greg cared deeply for all the people he came into contact with," notes friend and fellow alum Bill Coleman. "His humanitarian spirit was immediately apparent in his sparkling eyes and his affectionate nature."

La Crosse businessmen receive honorary degrees

Two prominent La Crosse area businessmen received honorary degrees during spring commencement. David R. Skogen, chairman of the board for Festival Foods, and Donald J. Weber, founder and chief executive officer of Logistics Health, received honorary bachelor of science degrees.

Honorary degrees are given to highly deserving individuals who merit special recognition for exceptional achievement and distinction in a field or activity supporting the mission of the university.

DONALD J. WEBER

Don Weber's Marine battalion in Vietnam had the motto "Whatever it takes." Weber placed that motto on a plaque in UW-L's Veterans Hall of Honor. Under that line, he added, "Exemplify our Motto." Weber has.

Weber has led numerous creative health service programs. His latest is Logistics Health Inc., a world-class leader in military medical and dental readiness. LHI has grown to more than 900 employees.

Weber's connection to the military — he served in Vietnam from April 1967 through May 1968 and earned a Purple Heart and two Bronze Stars — remains strong. Not only does his company assist veterans, it honors them.

Weber and his wife, Roxanne, have established the Weber Family Foundation and are involved in various community service projects.

DAVID R. SKOGEN

The Onalaska native grew up excelling in sports and dreaming of coaching. He didn't end up coaching athletes, but he's become a team leader among supermarket staff for more than 50 years.

Skogen worked in the meat department of his family's Skogen's IGA in Onalaska. In 1974 when the store began expanding, he stepped into store operations. He's been a leader in the family business since, which has expanded into 16 Festival Foods stores statewide.

Skogen was named IGA International's "Retailer of the Year" in 1989 and in 2005 received the honor of "Wisconsin Grocer of the Year."

Skogen has been successful in the community as well, serving with many non-profit and service organizations throughout the area. He and his wife Barb, '67, are leading philanthropists.

Reunions set for fall

From left, Sonya Roberts, Mary Deckert and Carol Sanders, all Class of '61, returned for their 50th reunion last fall. A similar photo was taken of the three in 1960 in the old stadium. Make plans to attend Alumni Reunion weekend, Oct. 19-21, 2012.

Is it Homecoming? Or, Family, Friends & Alumni weekend? UW-L fall celebrations have had a variety of names and different formats over the years. But, no matter what we call it, it's a time for alumni to return to reconnect and live "The La Crosse Experience."

This year, rekindle old friendships and take a walk down memory lane during one of two weekends in October. The first (Oct. 5-7) will have a varsity athletic theme; the second (Oct. 19-21) will welcome back affinity groups, and classes celebrating milestone anniversaries.

Whichever weekend you select, know the UW-L lantern is shining brightly and will always welcome you home.

reunion schedule

Varsity Homecoming Oct. 5-7

Focus is on varsity athletic reunions. The 2012 Athletic Wall of Fame inductees will be recognized, and the football captains and the 1992 championship football team will reunite.

Alumni Reunion Weekend

Oct. 19-21

Reunion groups scheduled to return: Delta Sigma Phi 45th reunion, Beta Sigma Chi, Silver Eagles, Concert Choir, Class of 1962 and Class of 1987.

HELPING OUR OWN

Alumni can help the UW-L Food Pantry by donating non-perishable food items. The campus pantry, open since fall 2006, allows students to receive food items at no cost, which many need during challenging collegiate economic times.

The most common items needed: cereal, pasta, canned meat, pasta sauces and peanut butter. Drop off items at the Cleary Alumni & Friends Center, 615 East Ave. N., on weekdays, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

For more info contact Kaye Schendel at kschendel@uwlax.edu, or Janie Spencer at jspencer@uwlax.edu or 608.785.8495.

UW-L Alumni Association board members donated to the UW-L Food Pantry. You can too. Drop off items at the Cleary Alumni & Friends Center on weekdays from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Kristine Mason, left, earned a bachelor's degree in recreation in 1973 and a master's in library science in 1979. She became a media director in Eau Claire Public Schools where she taught for 25 years. Schley, '78, graduated with a major in English and taught high school English before becoming a State Farm Insurance Agent. Schley has established a scholarship in memory of Mason that aids education majors.

Planting a seed

Fund established to nurture curiosity, grow great teachers

Jane Schley remembers nature lessons on hikes through Myrick Park in 1974. Her new college friend, Kristine Mason, would pull down tree branches and bring the White Pine needles to her fingertips. Mason, '73 & '79, would count the needles — w-h-i-t-e — five needles like the word. Mason loved to teach others about trees — she loved teaching and learning.

On cool, quiet mornings, she would ask children and friends, "Would you like to learn to pet a bee?" Then, through the dewy leaves, she would pull back soft petals of a flower and pet the back of a sleeping bumblebee.

She would ask her students to do the same.

Mason could identify birds by their call. She was enthralled when a butterfly would emerge from its chrysalis, gently opening its wings.

"We both really loved learning," Schley says about herself and Mason. "We had key people in our lives who taught us that it was OK to contemplate a butterfly or to pet a bee."

Schley, '78, and Mason believed curiosity needed nurturing to grow, so they decided to, one day, set up a scholarship fund to help others learn, grow and become teachers too. After college, the two began saving money. But in 2001, Mason died unexpectedly at age 50 before the fund was established.

As part of the healing process, Schley set up the Kristine A. Mason Scholarship Fund for an education major with a strong financial need. Preference goes to applicants with a minor, emphasis or concentration in environmental studies or science because of Mason's strong environmental ethic.

"It's planting the seed, so they can go on and become teachers," says Schley. "It is this perpetual ripple — it would really make her happy."

Honoring VETS

Interactive kiosks, monitors bring an array of veteran info to campus

You can now see photographs and biographies of La Crosse area veterans on campus. And, you can step in front of a webcam to thank a vet or share your military story.

The Hall of Honor at Veteran's Memorial Field Sports Complex continues to expand in how it's honoring veterans. The area was expanded this spring to include two touch-screen monitors that show photos and bios of area vets, along with Wisconsin Public TV videos of "Wisconsin Stories" from WWII, and the Korean and Vietnam wars.

Also, a two-sided kiosk allows visitors to track down information on vets and wars. And, the kiosk serves as a guest book, along with allowing visitors to record messages and personal stories to be archived on YouTube and shared worldwide.

The interactive media are among the hall's additions that include a new veterans' recognition wall. Improvements were completed in time for Freedom Fest in June. They're made possible from donations made through the UW-L Foundation.

Al Trapp, president of the UW-L Foundation, says the hall is quickly becoming a showcase on campus. "The Hall of Honor is intended to be a destination where people may come to remember, honor, thank and learn about our veterans," explains Trapp.

NEW STUDENT CENTER COMING

Students shape an ever-evolving campus

Construction hat on head and shovel in hand, Anne (Morgan) Hlavacka stood between Graff Main Hall and Cartwright Center in 1984 watching ground break on a new addition to the student center.

Cartwright's Gunning Addition was added when Hlavacka was president of the UW-L Student Association. At the time, the campus was booming as student population was nearing its mid-80s peak at nearly 9,900 students. Students voted to add on to the center for gathering, networking and community events space.

The needs of UW-L students have evolved since then, but students' commitment to the campus' future remains strong, says Hlavacka, '84, now director of UW-L's Small Business Development Center.

In an April referendum, students approved construction of a new student center. The new $55 million building, planned on the Wimberly Hall parking lot, will replace Cartwright and be funded by student fees.

"Usually when people make a decision it's about 'what's in it for me,'" notes Hlavacka. "Student decisions are about what is good for the future of the campus and the students. That's the way that students looked at it back then and that's the way they look at it today."

Construction will likely be completed in fall 2016 and most students who voted for the facility will not set foot in it as a student.

"They will not see the return personally, but they will know they did something important in the long run to see the campus continue to evolve," she notes. "It demonstrates the ongoing commitment of students to see the campus be the very best it can be."

PEACE AMONG THE CONFLICT

Alum finds peaceful place amid turbulent spring

Jordan was amid the Arab spring that rocked the Middle East starting about 18 months ago. The country has become home to waves of refugees from Palestine, Iraq and Syria after fleeing conflict in their own regions.

Despite the commotion, Tim Tschumperlin, '89, describes this place as peaceful — “the most remarkable place” he has ever lived.

“Even though this part of the world appears to be a powder keg ready to explode, the Jordanians are happy living in their peaceful country,” says Tschumperlin. “I find the Jordanians to be the friendliest people I have ever met. Even the poorest of the poor are willing to invite us in without asking anything in return.”

As director of community service for American Community School Amman, in Amman, Jordan, Tschumperlin is contributing to the peace. Part of his role is ensuring all students commit to community service in Jordan and surrounding countries. They build Habitat for Humanity homes, raise funds for victims of natural disaster, and help Syrians fleeing their country to the border of Jordan and Turkey. Tschumperlin recently organized a toy drive for Syrian children living in poverty in the Jordanian village of Mafraq.

“Most have clothing and food, but nothing to hug or hold, so putting a toy in their hands was something I will never forget,” he says.

Tschumperlin got the travel bug while involved in UW-E's Wisconsin in Scotland program. He has taught overseas since 1991 in Norway, Denmark, Hungary and Cyprus before Jordan.

“Once I began teaching at international schools, I became addicted to the fact that I could see the world and work with kids from so many different backgrounds,” he says.

ON TOP: Tim Tschumperlin, '89, says it's a tradition for him to do a victory jump after each community project he is involved with as director of community service for American Community School Amman, in Amman, Jordan. “As I get older, the hang-time of the jump decreases,” he notes.

The Res Ho Bunc

IT'S NOT ONE OF THOSE JOBS YOU HEARD ABOUT IN HIGH SCHOOL. YOU PROBABLY DON'T KNOW WHAT A RESIDENCE HALL DIRECTOR DOES. LEARN ABOUT THEIR WORK AND HOW MENTORSHIP COMES FULL CIRCLE FOR THIS GROUP OF RESIDENCE LIFE STAFF.

Within a span of 45 minutes, residence hall directors could be helping a student with a serious mental health issue, engaging in long conversation with parents or developing a plan to help a student adjust to college life.

He or she is responsible for a residence hall — a home to hundreds of students. These directors stay awake late nights, rise for early morning meetings and have living quarters where they work.

“It’s really kind of a kooky job when you sit down and look at it,” says Troy Richter, former Laux and Hutchison Hall director. “But it’s a lifestyle, and it seems like every hall director I know really enjoys what they are doing and is invested in the students.”

Richter, like Lisa Jicinsky and Patrick Heise, says he’s grateful for the people who tapped him on the shoulder and made him aware of the opportunities in residence life. All three became hall directors because of mentorship from each other. Richter and Heise went on to become assistant directors in the UW-L Residence Life Office.

TEACHING THROUGH RELATIONSHIPS

Jicinsky recalls attending UW-L in early 2000 when she had her heart set on being a teacher. That was until her former UW-L hall director — Heise — opened her eyes to residence life opportunities.

“He helped me see a lot of my strengths could be used as a hall director,” she says.

She learned from Heise that residence life was another form of teaching — “teaching through relationships rather than lesson plans,” she explains.

Residence life friendships formed that didn’t end when the contract was up, she says. Heise agrees. His former hall director in the 1990s — Richter — was the brother he never had.

“Troy was a charismatic influence in my life. He made me aware of this profession,” says Heise. “He was someone I wanted to model my own life path after.”

Richter says he too had a mentor in residence life who encouraged him to get involved and eventually become a hall director. That man was Kevin Helmkamp, director of Wentz Hall in the 1980s.

“Each of us had a light bulb go on and we fell in love with it (residence life),” says Heise. “It’s affirming when the person you worked with so closely has chosen the same career you have.”

MENTORSHIP COMES FULL CIRCLE

Fast forward more than 20 years. Helmkamp is now an associate dean at UW-Madison. His son, Justin, just finished his first year at UW-L and will be a sophomore and a resident assistant at Eagle Hall in fall.

“If I would have scripted his freshman year, it would not have been any better than what it was,” says Kevin. The key? Getting involved in residence life, says Justin.

One evening while in the basement of Coate Hall, Justin overheard a meeting of resident assistants and executives from the building. They didn’t have anyone to take notes, so they asked Justin to help. He did and eventually was voted secretary of Coate Hall.

“I’ve had the best year I could have because I’ve met so many people and I know I have friends for life,” says Justin.

His mentor for the year? Coate Hall Director Jicinsky.

Kevin says he recognizes the long line of mentors in residence life, but never expected it would come full circle — involving his son.

“Housing really allows you to integrate with students’ lives in the tough times, celebrations and when they are learning about themselves,” says Kevin. “I hope Justin can emulate Lisa, Troy and Patrick in his work.”

Justin Helmkamp, UW-L sophomore, with his father, Kevin Helmkamp, associate dean at UW-Madison, on move-out day in May. Justin, who will be a resident assistant this fall, is following in his dad’s footsteps. Kevin was a hall director in Wentz Hall in the 1980s.

Drake Hall

A LOOK BACK AT THE FIRE

An early morning fire in Drake Hall forced students into the January cold — and out of their rooms for the rest of the semester. Yet, Drake residents quickly discovered their community was more than a building.

A basement smoke detector activated the building's alarms at 4:23 a.m. Sunday, Jan. 29. Students were out of the building when firefighters arrived to find flames in a basement study.

When firefighters extinguished the fire a short time later, much of the building suffered smoke damage. Electrical, alarm and technological systems were compromised. By Sunday afternoon, temporary beds were set up in Eagle Hall and other students volunteered to temporarily house Drake residents.

Wednesday, Feb. 1, investigators informed university staff the damage was more extensive than originally thought. Residence Life staff decided to close the building for the semester and by Thursday evening students received rooming options.

Of the 271 residents, only 70 cancelled their housing contracts and moved off campus with friends, or into space at either Viterbo University or Western Technical College residence halls, or local hotels. Others found space in other residence hall and studies.

Friends, families, university employees and area residents helped students with the unexpected move. Our own Alumni Association provided all hall residents $25 gift cards to help ease the transition. Food and supplies were donated by La Crosse businesses.

Drake students received an outpouring of support from fellow residence hall students — and from other UW campuses. Throughout the semester, get-togethers were held for floor communities and special “Drake” study areas were established.

The hall is expected to open for the fall 2012 semester, following $2.5 million in repairs. The fire originated in a piece of furniture. The cause has not been determined.

Representatives from two national organizations promoting fire safety visited campus to document student, staff and fire department reaction. Campus Firewatch and the Minger Foundation plan to develop fire safety information from the interviews to distribute nationwide.

NEW COACHES

Lily Hallock: named volleyball coach replacing Sheila Perkins, who retired at the end of the 2011 season. Hallock had served as a graduate assistant volleyball coach at Smith College (Mass.) the last two seasons. She was assistant coach at the University of California, Santa Cruz (2007-10) and assistant varsity coach at South Eugene (Oregon) High School (2004-06). Hallock earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Oregon and is pursuing a master's degree at Smith College.

Charlie King: named swimming & diving head coach, replacing Rich Pein, who retired at the end of 2011-12. He had been assistant swimming & diving coach and recruiting coordinator at the University of Utah since 2008. King was head coach at Millikin University (Ill.) and Augsburg College (Minn.) and a graduate assistant at St. Cloud State University (Minn.). He earned bachelor's and master's degrees at St. Cloud (Minn.) State.

PLAY BALL: Baseball team joins forces with Loggers

The UW-L baseball team and La Crosse Loggers have announced an agreement to provide long-term financial stability for the UW-L program while raising funds to improve Copeland Park where the Loggers play.

In the partnership, the Loggers will make an annual donation to cover the baseball program's yearly fundraising needs. Facing budgetary pressures from the state in May 2009, UW-L discontinued funding head coach salaries for baseball and men's tennis. The programs were revived through private donations.

The collaboration will give the baseball program a consistent revenue stream. UW-L will assist the Loggers in raising funds to pay for $650,000 in improvements to Copeland Park, where the Eagles would move their games. The partnership hinges on the Loggers completing an agreement on Copeland Park with the City of La Crosse.

WIAC coaches of the year

Three coaches earned Wisconsin Intercollegiate Athletic Association Coach of the Year honors this spring:

- Josh Buchholtz, '01, Men's Outdoor Track and Field
- Pat Healy, Women's Outdoor Track and Field
- Chris Schwarz, '02 & '04, Baseball

TITLE TOWN

UW-L hosted the 2012 NCAA III Wrestling Championships at the La Crosse Center in March. A total of 170 wrestlers from 62 teams competed. The two-day championships marked the second straight year UW-L hosted the national tournament in downtown La Crosse. The Eagles placed fourth, with all five wrestlers earning All-America honors. It's UW-L's 18th top-10 finish at the national championships since joining the NCAA III in 1992.

100 YEARS OF SPORT

The Wisconsin Intercollegiate Athletic Conference has recognized five UW-L coaches and 112 UW-L student-athletes as part of its centennial celebration in 2011-12.

All-Time Teams were selected in men's and women's sports classified as "championship" sports in the conference.

Coaches and athletes will be honored Aug. 4 in Madison. The UW-L coaches selected are:

Phil Esten, men's cross country:

head coach of men's cross country for 28 years (1970-97), leading the team to the 1996 NCAA III title. Esten won 20 conference titles and was 1996 National Co-coach of the Year.

Barb Gibson, '78, women's gymnastics: finished her 27th season as the women's gymnastics head coach in 2012.

She started at UW-L in 1985 and has led the program to 15 National Collegiate Gymnastics Association championships, including 10 of the last 12. The Eagles have won 18 WIAC titles under Gibson, named conference coach of the year six times. She has been selected national Coach of the Year five seasons.

Mark Guthrie, men's track & field: men's track & field head coach for 19 years (1988-2006), earning 22 NCAA III championships, including 12 indoor and 10 outdoor. The Eagles swept indoor and outdoor national titles 10 different seasons. Guthrie won 34 league titles and was WIAC Coach of the Year 16 times. He earned eight national coach of the year awards.

Roger Harring, '58, football:

head football coach for 31 years (1969-99), winning three national titles, NAIA II in 1985 and NCAA III in 1992 and 1995. He captured 15 conference titles and was WIAC Coach of the Year seven times. Harring earned three national Coach of the Year titles and recorded 261 wins, the most in WIAC history.

Martha Stephens, badminton:

coached women's badminton (1968-79) and women's tennis (1968-76). Neither ever lost a conference title during her tenure. In national AIAW badminton tournaments, her teams tied for second, and placed fourth and fifth. Another of her squads placed in the top 10 with only one-half of a team complement. She taught physical education from 1968-99.

On your mark. Get set ...

UW-L will host the 2013 NCAA III Outdoor Track & Field Championships at Roger Harring Stadium at Veterans Memorial Field Sports Complex. The men's and women's championships, May 23-25, will feature nearly 800 competitors. The meet is the largest single site for number of competitors in any of the championships hosted by NCAA III.

NCAA issues investigation report

The NCAA's Committee on Infractions has issued a report finding UW-L to have committed three major violations related to the school's financial aid practices. The NCAA found that no one involved in UW-L Athletics, including university or departmental leadership, members of the coaching staff, or student-athletes, acted intentionally to violate applicable rules. The report also found no evidence that student-athletes actually received aid inappropriately — only that the process itself lacked sufficient safeguards to protect against improper awards. The NCAA placed the university on two years' probation. Find out more at: www.uwlathletics.com/ncaacase.

MURPHY LIBRARY STEAMBOAT COLLECTION IS ONLINE

<http://uwdc.library.wisc.edu/collections/LaCrosseSteamboat>

40,000+ PRINTS

The UW-L Historic Steamboat Photograph collection consists of more than 40,000 photographic images of steamboats on inland U.S. waterways, primarily the Mississippi, Ohio and Missouri rivers and their tributaries. Photos depict steamboats in every phase — from construction to destruction — along with daily operations from the 1850s to now.

29,000 NOW ONLINE

You can find nearly 29,000 images from the collection online. Murphy Library worked with the UW-Madison Digitization Center over the past four years to scan and host the images. Hits to the site have grown from 2,096 in fiscal year 2008 to 45,988 so far this fiscal year.

Each image has an identifier (i.e., MURPHY NEG. 13799). Use these identifiers to easily find the images you're interested in.

WHO COLLECTED IT ALL?

For 35 years La Crosse native Ralph Du Pae crisscrossed the country asking steamboat photo collectors to share a copy of their prints. When Du Pae died in 2008 at the age of 83, his passion was responsible for the world's largest collection of steamboat photos.

MORE THAN BOATS

The photos show steamboats in all kinds of settings — on the water, going through a lock, at a city's waterfront or levee, tied up at shore. Other river images include:

- steamboat captains
- engineers
- pilots
- passengers
- crews
- city and town waterfronts
- levees
- locks and dams
- river-related activities (fishing, swimming, clamming)

1 TO 100+

Some steamboats, especially the bigger excursion boats, have more than 100 photographs. For others, there might be only a single photo to document its existence.

Editor John Smalley on the 35-year transformation of newspapers

John Smalley recalls watching state news break 35 years ago. It streamed into the newsroom with the clacking of the ticker tape. Today he watches the same exciting process as the reporters he manages post 140-character tweets.

The evolution of the newsroom has been fantastic, says Smalley, '81, editor of the Wisconsin State Journal in Madison.

"On the one hand, certainly there is a nostalgic aspect — to wish it was the way it used to be in simpler times," says Smalley. "But the reality is we can do so much more now and serve the audience in more useful, quick and efficient ways."

The mass communications major got his start as a sports reporter at the La Crosse Tribune in fall 1977. He ended up working 40 hours a week while attending UW-L. As Smalley gained skills in reporting, he attempted to help launch an alternative student newspaper to counter The Racquet. He also campaigned to become vice president of the student association. Smalley jokes

"The reality is we can do so much more now and serve the audience in more useful, quick and efficient ways."

John Smalley, '81

both of the attempts failed, ending his alternative newspaper and political careers.

However, Smalley made an influence with the career path he chose. Today the 140-character tweets from the State Journal newsroom followed up with more in-depth stories, have helped people understand the issues of the day. When Gov. Scott Walker's proposed legislation to end public employees' right to collectively bargain led to a month of protesting, the Wisconsin State Journal covered the controversy and was named a Pulitzer Prize finalist.

"I was really proud," says Smalley. "And it was gratifying for the staff."

But that gratification comes with its challenges. Smalley notes the industry took a double hit as technology exploded at the same time as the economy collapsed in 2007.

Working for news can be stressful, says Smalley. But his feelings for the industry still haven't changed.

"I love it as much now as did in the fall of 1977," he says. "It's a lot different, but I still love it."

BROADCASTERS RECALL HUMBLE BEGINNINGS IN RADIO

Bob Bruce,
David Schaper,
Tim Scott.

All broadcasters have the same bad dream, says Bob Bruce.

Sitting in the studio, they turn on the microphone to go on live. But, just as they hit the button, they promptly forget what to say.

“When I walk into the studio, I still think ‘Please don’t let this be the day where I completely forget how to do what I’m doing,’” jokes Bruce, who attended UW-L from 1985-89.

But the host of a radio talk show based in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, notes that day hasn’t come yet. Luckily, Bruce and other alums in broadcast careers had great mentorships from UW-L mass communications professors and at WLSU, the campus Wisconsin Public Radio station. It gave them plenty of opportunities to work the bugs out before launching into radio careers.

At WLSU, they learned valuable lessons like soda and pizza aren’t a good mix right before broadcast time. “Let’s just say I had to swallow a belch,” recalls UW-L Alum Tim Scott, now Operations Manager—Clear Channel Media & Entertainment—Madison.

They also learned essential journalism skills — like how to ask the hard questions, says Dave Schaper, ’88, a National Public Radio reporter covering the Midwest. Schaper recalls when he and Bruce, college roommates, covered the Catbirds, a minor league basketball team, for WLSU. At a news conference, they asked the coach about holding players back from moving on to the NBA in order to finish the season in first place.

“He called it a ‘piss-poor question,’” recalls Schaper. “We wore that with a badge of honor. I think people get upset if you are asking the hard questions.”

Schaper, Scott and Bruce are all grateful for their humble beginnings on campus. It has led to careers covering state and national news and sports.

“Radio is my life. It’s what I’ve always wanted to do,” says Scott. “If it were not for humble beginnings way back when, I don’t know if I would be where I am today.”

CLASSNOTES

49

Ruth Kelsh, Eau Claire, saw her granddaughter graduate from UW-L in May. Kelsh says when she entered college in 1945 there were only about 600 students. "We had two buildings — it was easy to get around," she recalls. Kelsh remembers wonderful teachers such as Wittich, Reuter, the Bairds, Rovang, Wentz and, of course, "the ultimate mentor in P.E., Emma Lou Wilder." Tuition was $36 per semester, very few men were in school in that era so they didn't have school dances. "By the time I graduated, the men had come back from the war," Kelsh says. She keeps in touch with classmates. "Coming from a little town of 300 (Humbird) college opened a whole new world for me, and I have been forever grateful," she says.

50

Allegra (Jostad) Silberstein, Davis, Calif., had a chapbook, "Through Sun-glinting Particles," published by Parallel Press in Madison. She hopes to do some readings in Wisconsin. In March 2010, she became the first Poet Laureate for the city of Davis, where she has lived since 1967.

52

C. Ashley Ellefson, Cortland, N.Y., professor of history emeritus at the State University of New York at Cortland, had a manuscript, "Fortune's Orphan: The Troubled Career of Thomas Macnemara in Maryland, 1703-1719," placed on the Web as Volume 847 of the Archives of Maryland Online. Macnemara was probably the best lawyer of his time in Maryland, but was constantly in trouble because he was not afraid to challenge a corrupt political system and a haphazard system of justice. At the same time he was popular enough with the voters of Annapolis that he became a member of the city council. From there he became an alderman, then mayor of the city and finally an alderman again. Historians have condemned Macnemara because they have believed everything his enemies said about him without looking further. Ellefson has tried to present a more realistic view of him.

Jerry Grunski, Evergreen, Colo., is enjoying a second career as an author after retiring as an instructor and chair of an English department in 1988. "Gerald," the 24th book he has contributed to, was recently published by Successful Sports Officiating, Human Kinetics in Champaign, Ill. He has had more than 300 articles published. Many were in Referee magazine, but he is also published in a large number of regional publications. He won $500 for a historical piece — the third time he has captured the prize.

Thomas P. Rosandich, Daphne, Ala., received one of the first Liberty Medals from the Statue of Liberty Club and The Wiegand Foundation. The U.S. Sports Academy president and CEO received the medal that honors individuals or organizations that promote freedom and liberty throughout the world.

57

Judy (Eberlein) Ziemann, Bessemer, Mich., has been substitute teaching in elementary schools in Hurley, Bessemer and Ironwood, Mich. She looks forward to skiing and snowshoeing in winter.

61

Wesley Mooney, Sun City West, Ariz., has been named to a post at the headquarter offices of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in New York City. Mooney had been on special assignment for Wisconsin Telephone Co., working out of the utility's Milwaukee headquarters. Mooney joined Wisconsin Telephone in 1964 as a communications specialist in the marketing department of the Racine district office. Mooney transferred to the company's Milwaukee headquarters in 1969, serving four years in the public relations department coordinating urban affairs. Before joining Wisconsin Telephone, Mooney, a Racine native, was a teacher for three years at Stephen Bull Elementary School. He was active in civic affairs, including the Racine Environment Committee and Urban League, where he served as president. In 1967 he was picked as one of the Wisconsin Jaycees' five outstanding young men of the year. He was the first black person named for the honor.

George Schubert and his wife, Arline, were asked to present a paper titled, "A Chronological History of Assumption of Risk & the use of Waivers & Disclaimers Used in Major League Baseball (MLB)" at the Cooperstown Symposium on Baseball and American Culture in spring 2012.

65

William Heineke, Gillette, Wyo., is in the 26th year of a Summer Day Treatment Program he developed for high-risk children and their families provided through the Community Mental Health Center, Behavioral Health Services at Campbell County Memorial Hospital. Since its inception, the program has served more than 1,000 children and their families.

Gail (Lloyd) Peterson Ream retired from the Camden County Board of Elections in New Jersey and moved to Myrtle Beach, S.C. She invites friends from Wisconsin to visit when traveling on the East Coast. Gail has five granddaughters and two sons.

68

Ray Byerly, Sheboygan, is a group dynamics teacher at Lakeshore Technical College in Cleve-land, Wis. He heats and cools his home with a geothermal heat pump. Get info on the innovative system at www.richlinebuilders.com and click on "residential" and then click on the home in the upper righthand corner.

69

Dominic J. Cibrario, Racine, studied South Asian Studies at the University of Pennsylvania. He spent two years as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Nepal (1962-64). He taught English and Latin at Horlick High School until retiring in January 2000. While on sabbatical he wrote his first novel, "The Pomelo Tree." After retiring, he expanded the novel into a trilogy. Find it at amazon.com.

Thomas H. Jacobson lives in Viroqua where he owns a photography business.

Warren G. Dahl, Osseo, who coached basketball for 36 years at Osseo-Fairchild (Wis.) High School, was inducted into the Wisconsin Basketball Coaches Hall of Fame Oct. 8, 2011. Dahl was named UW-L's high school basketball coach of the year in 1992. He recently finished his 6th season as an assistant basketball coach for his son, Keenan, at New Auburn (Wis.) High School.

Margaret Ewert, Hudson, Fla., is retired from teaching. She still plans tours, most recently to the Galapagos Islands in April 2012. The tours leave from Minneapolis and meet up with other groups. Last year's trip was to Costa Rica. Ewert sponsored a charity event, Leave A Legacy, in honor of her son, Joe Rakha, at the Onalaska Library in fall 2011, adding 240 new books to the collection. In summer 2012, she will teach art enrichment classes at La Crosse Logan High School. It's her 42nd year of teaching art in the La Crosse area.

Kristine R. Fritz, Sheboygan, has retired as a Pre-K PE program instructor for the Sheboygan Area Schools. She's still active in the Wisconsin and national health, physical education and recreation dance associations. She received the NASPE Joy of Effort Award in March 2012. The award culminates her lifelong career in physical education.

Irvine "Irr" LaFleur, Manitowoc, retired from teaching at Valders (Wis.) High School in June 2011. He taught mathematics there for 40 years. He and his wife, Candace, have been married 40 years, and have two adult children and a grandson.

73

Kenneth Montanye, '73 & '74, Eau Claire, is a semi-retired teacher. He still coaches and does some substitute teaching, along with teaching driver education part-time. His son plans to attend UW-L in fall 2012.

74

Jim Kobs, Onalaska, retired in 2008. He and his wife, Shirley, who retired in 2010, enjoy traveling and spending time with their two kids, Lisa and Travis. They planned trips to Europe and to New Zealand this year.

75

Fred Lautz, Brookfield, has been named to The Best Lawyers in America 2012. Lawyers honored have received high ratings in peer-review surveys as they have earned respect for their abilities, professionalism and integrity. He works with the national law firm of Quarles & Brady LLP, Milwaukee.

Cindy A. Mueller, '75, and her husband, Gary Stigler, '76, live in New Berlin. Cindy works for Franklin Public Schools. Gary is owner of Ideal Logos & Awards.

Peter Wysocki, Muskego, is in his 36th year as a student supervisor at Brookfield Central. His extra duties include videotaping football and boy's basketball. He is most proud of being in his third year coaching the long, high and triple jumps with the girl's program, after coaching boy's track for 34 years. He has coached five state track champions.

77

Daniel Heinritz, Appleton, has retired after 24 years teaching and coaching in the Appleton Area School District. He and his wife, Jill, enjoy visiting their six grandchildren. One of their daughters, Jennifer, graduated in '98. She married Tom Lee, '97.

78

Kevin D. Chroninger, Sterling, Va., recently retired after 34 years of service with the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). He and his wife, Nana, continue to live in Sterling.

Rebecca L Hawkins, Paradise Valley, Ariz., has retired after 34 years of practicing medicine. For the last 28 years, she was a teaching hospitalist at the Carl T. Hayden VAMC in Phoenix. As an associate professor of medicine with the University of Arizona, Hawkins has worked with interns, residents and medical students and has been able to "pass on the knowledge and work ethic taught to me by my mentors at UW-L and UW-Madison. The state of Wisconsin provided me with an excellent, affordable education." As she begins retirement, she sends best wishes to current learners and alumni, and especially to Dr. Rausch who stopped her in the hall one day in 1973 to ask if she had applied to take the MCAT exam. "That moment and so many moments shared by my mentors changed my life and opened so many doors for me," she says.

Marla Sepnanski, Kronenwetter, has been selected to participate in Leadership Wisconsin. As a fellow of Group XV, she will participate in a two-year program that will involve workshops and conferences throughout the state, nation and abroad. See more at: www.LeadershipWisconsin.org

Alum wins contest

Jerry Grunski, '52, took first place for the third time in a writing contest for historical articles in the magazine Historically Jeffco, published where he lives in Jefferson County, Colo. It's the 326th magazine article he's had published.

Among them are profiles in regional magazines and advisory columns in "Referee," a magazine for sports officials. Grunski also had five chapters published in a textbook titled "Successful Sports Officiating." The retired Highland Park (Ill.) High School English Department chair had a double major in physical education and English. Find some of his works at: <http://historicjeffco.wordpress.com/>

CD: Great Days

A decade-long summer jazz workshop has resulted in a CD. UW-L faculty member and jazz bassist Karyn Quinn, '84, teamed up with Kansas City Pianist Wayne Hawkins and Portland Drummer Todd Strait to record "Great Days." Quinn says the CD, released last summer, is a hit for fans of jazz trios featuring piano, bass and drums. "The tunes have great improvisation, but nothing too 'wild' or 'far out' so they are fairly easy to listen to," she says. CDs are $15 and available in La Crosse. Listen to and download tracks at iTunes or CDbaby.

Outlining Wisconsin's governors

The history behind Wisconsin's governors is rich and Ralph L. Whiting, '69, is sharing it. The retired La Crosse educator received a $2,000 grant from the Wisconsin Educational Media Association Permanent Endowment Trust in 2008 to create and publish 5,000 posters featuring Wisconsin's 51 governors through 2010.

After retiring Whiting continued to teach summer school at Viterbo University. While teaching Wisconsin history, he realized there was no single source with information on all of the Badger State's governors. That inspired him to apply for the grant.

Whiting has distributed posters to public schools, libraries and historical societies. Personally delivering posters to six of the living, former governors, including Gov. Patrick Lucey who is now 94, was most rewarding. "He just beamed," says Whiting.

Leaving a legacy

Retired CLS Dean John Magerus

For John Magerus, the decision to include the UW-L Foundation in his will was simple.

“The university was a good place for me. I enjoyed my time there,” explains the retired College of Liberal Studies Dean. “It’s just a continuation of giving that everyone should undertake. Besides, I’ve never seen a U-Haul behind a hearse.”

Magerus has always been generous, a characteristic he learned from his Oklahoma City parents, a factory worker and homemaker. “They were ordinary, hard-working people,” he notes.

To honor them, Magerus helped establish an Oklahoma City Community Foundation endowment in their name.

When he retired Magerus’ CLS colleagues organized a performance by faculty, staff and students to create a fund to honor the top CLS graduate. Friends and colleagues responded and Magerus added to endow it, creating the John E. Magerus Award for the Outstanding Graduating Senior from the College of Liberal Studies.

Magerus, a member of the UW-L Foundation Legacy Guild, encourages others to give. “All of us have more stuff than we need,” he notes. “It feels good to give back.”
